Young Living Essential Oils Can Protect Your Pet

Most pet owners grow so fond of their cuddly friends they are often simply considered part of the family. From dogs and cats to lizards, birds and even farm animals, people want the best for their beloved animals. Unfortunately, however, animals suffer many of the same ills and physical ailments as humans. And when these problems arise, many pet owners don't know what to do. Luckily, whether these health issues are generic, or simply the result of day-to-day living, they can be improved with real solutions from Young Living.

Throughout history humans have benefited from the use of essential oils for various health applications. However, with the advent of "modern medicine," essential oils fell out of favor. Recently, though, the use of oils for improving health and wellness has been rediscovered, with pets also enjoying its resurgence.

These essential oils are nature's answer to many health concerns. In fact, animals often eat plants as part of a normal routine to settle a stomach, promote vomiting or because they need the greens. Fresh plants have all the nutrients of essential oils, but in very small quantities. Therefore, it stands to reason that our pets would benefit from essential oil use just as we do if used properly.

Research has shown that essential oils kill infectious agents better than conventional therapy. This includes bacteria, viruses, fungus and parasites both internal and external. Essential oils cover the gamut of animal health problems and can very well provide a better life for you and your pet.

People love their pets—and for good reason. Animals bring us laughter, companionship and love, and are a meaningful part of our lives. That's why their health is so important to us. Fortunately, Young Living Essential Oils can be a powerful health tool to help you care for your animal. Essential oils are a time-tested, proven and safe way to improve your pet's health and enhance their well-being.
