Quantum Physics and Essential Oils

The next time someone asks you what an essential oil can do, you can give them two answers. You can choose to give them a rousing reading of a chemistry book, describing how each chemical compound reacts within the body and the health benefits that are produced. Or, you can help them understand the quantum physics approach to the health benefits of Young Living Essential Oils.

Essential oils are merely a packet of possibilities—and—which possibility it manifests for you will depend on your thoughts and desires. Because different people have different chemistry, the benefits received from each oil may be different. In short, the potential action of an oil is defined and limited by its chemistry, but the determining factor as to which potential action will manifest is defined and limited by the attitudes of the anointer and receiver.

What this ultimately means is that while the chemistry determines what is possible, quantum physics determines which possibilities actually happen. Therefore, the receiver of an essential oil must participate in their own healing. The oils are not healers, they are vehicles that must be facilitated by our supportive thoughts to work with optimal benefit.

Therefore, therapeutic essential oils are in a category all their own—above and beyond the simple drugs, antibiotics, and antibacterial agents marketed by pharmacists and physicians. Essential oils have been available on earth since the creation of plant life and are imbued with the qualities and intent of their creator. The medicines of man fabricated in factories and laboratories have no such qualities and intent of their makers is not necessarily healing. So you can see that the science of essential oils, as agents of health and healing, involves both physics and chemistry in combination with the human heart and mind.

“Essential oils have been available on earth since the creation of plant life and are imbued with the qualities and intent of their creator.”
